CULTURE OF PANSIES

Pansies love a cool, moist, well-enriched soil. Seed sown in early Spring, as soon as soil can be worked, will produce fine plants for Autumn flowering. However, as most people want pansies in the Spring, we will tell how to proceed to secure the finest and best.

Sow the seed in July or August in rows, about four to six inches apart, in a cold frame covering the seed with one-sixteenth inch of fine, clean soil or sand, this is generally applied by sifting with a screen. After seeding, pat down with a board and apply light application of water with a fine spray. Be sure to keep the bed a little damp, a temperature of 75 degrees or a little less is just right for sprouting pansies.

When plants are large enough to handle they are transplanted to stand five or six inches apart each way, in cold frames with the richest soil to be had. Pansies must be transplanted but once, to get the best results.

When the ground is frozen a few inches deep, about the middle of December, cover the cold frame with glass; when weather begins to warm up early in the Spring, give plenty of air, do not allow the plants to draw up or get spindly.

The above suggestions are for New England and Middle Northern and Eastern States. Farther South and wherever Winters are not very severe, the plants may be transplanted to the open ground with just enough mulch or salt hay to hide them from view after the ground freezes. One ounce of fresh seed produces approximately 4,000 to 6,000 plants.
